At the Crossroads By O. Wambakha

This is a deceptively simple novel. It is the story of Tabasa who, so involved in self-deception constantly creates problems for himself until he arrives at a stage he can no longer solve them.
Tabasa leaves Africa, his wife Peggy and their children, for Europe and America in search of identity and education. For all the fifteen years he spends there in serach of these goals he comes back with no achievement other than a second wife and their offspring. From here henceforth he leads a life of deception which the author tells so well with plenty of flashbacks that will keep the reader mesmerized that a normal human being can so foolishly entangle himself into self created prblems.
Irony, satire, suspense--these are all interwoven in the novel. In achieving this fusion Wambakha has rendered marvelous his writing skills. At the Crossroads is an interesting novel written in such a light manner it is bound to be a winner with the general reader. <
