Editorial Review

About the Author
After moving from England to Virginia to Colorado before the age of 10, Simon Grew up with a deep-seated desire for constant change and growth. From a young age, he realized that rules were made to be broken. While his friends were always following the pack and doing what they were told, Simon never stopped questioning authority and challenging the status quo. Unsure of what he wanted to do with his life, he gave college a try. After changing his major several times, Simon quickly realized that the system of higher education was not for everybody. Naturally, he dropped out of school and decided to pursue his passion in entrepreneurship. Since then he has run over $300,000 in businesses by the age of 20, and has mentored over 100 college students to run their own successful businesses. Simon now spends his time working on entrepreneurial projects, mentoring students and finding new ways to challenge himself and the people around him. His story of trial and error with passion-finding continues to help and inspire the people around him. Now it's your turn - what will your story be?
