Editorial Review

From School Library Journal
PreSchool-Grade 2—Jay leads readers on a journey through a fantastical zoo in this wordless picture book. Here, there are no cages, and the animals interact freely with the families and zookeepers roaming the park. The book has numerous mini-stories. Children can follow a family of four, a boy with a penguin balloon, and a couple with a perky French poodle, or simply watch the mischievous animals engage in remarkably humanlike activities. One side of the last spread asks readers: "Now that you've walked through the zoo, can you find…?" and shows cameos for careful observers to spot. The other side challenges perceptive youngsters: "What else can you find?" and asks questions such as "Whose legs are these?" and "Whose lunch is this?" Jay's distinctive crackle-varnished paintings are light and fun. Her colors are soft and her shapes rounded, making the animals as friendly as the stuffed toys on a child's bed. Youngsters will have a grand time tracing the movements of everything from parakeets to pandas.—Carrie Rogers-Whitehead, Kearns Library, UT

From Booklist
In this fantastical offering, English illustrator Jay creates a zoo without the usual barriers between the animals and their visitors. When it opens, people swarm the entrance where beaks, trunks, and heads of curious animals peek out from hedges and trees as they observe the approaching humans. After the opening two-page picture map, each horizontal scene includes a large cast of people and animals engaged in dozens of individual activities and interactions. The oil paintings reward close attention with amusing visual details and small wordless dramas that carry through from page to page. Jay’s signature style is clearly in evidence here, not only in the people’s dainty limbs extending from elegantly elongated bodies with ballooning torsos and skirts, but also in the paintings’ crackled-varnish finish that creates random, yet pleasing effects. The closing pages feature seek-and-find games that will send children hunting through the pages once again. Polished yet playful, this nearly wordless picture book is an engaging choice. Preschool-Grade 2. --Carolyn Phelan
